Peacemaking in Afganistan

Report from Kabul

Maya Evans

Maya has travelled to Afghanistan six times in the past several years, leading small delegations of peace activists on trips there to stand in solidarity with Afghan peace activists, and witness the ongoing conflicts.

The Afghan Peace Volunteers forms a small, intentional, multiethnic live-in community in Kabul. They wish to be a working example of a group of youth who are building alternative lifestyles and ways of relating which counter the socio-economic, environmental and military violence in Afghanistan and the world.

APV seek to building a green, equal and nonviolent world without war. They run several projects dedicated to these aims: planting trees and developing green spaces, use and promotion of non-fossil fuels and renewable energy, permaculture learning and practice, Borderfree Afghan Street Kids School, The Winter duvet project, a Food Bank project and a cycling initiative.
